

Freeman's Mill

was one of several mills in Gwinnett County that used a local river as a power source to turn gears and millstones. The Alcovy River supplied the water for this mill. Wheat and corn were ground into flour and cornmeal. The mill was a community gathering place where people would meet to talk about the latest news and go swimming in the mill pond.