Officials celebrate new SPLOST projects in Gwinnett

Gwinnett County officials are commemorating the completion of three SPLOST-funded projects in different parts of the county this October.

Officials commemorated the opening of the Diverging Diamond Interchange at Jimmy Carter Boulevard and I-85 on October 3 with a ribbon cutting on the bridge's pedestrian walkway. The DDI was completed last summer and is the second DDI in the county.

A ribbon cutting was also held for the second phase of the Gwinnett Fire Training Academy on October 4. An expansion project, funded by the 2009 SPLOST program, adds a three-bay storage building for fire apparatus and a training pavilion to the facility.

On October 18, officials celebrate the opening of the new Lilburn City Hall and Lilburn Branch Library. The two-level building includes 5,217 square feet of shared community and support space in addition to the 18,864-square-foot library and 24,927-square-foot city hall.

PROTECTING OUR RESOURCES

When it fogs, it clogs

Sewer backups can occur at your home or on public sewer lines. Backups in your home can be costly to your wallet, but backups on the public system can be costly to the environment.

Many times, these backups are caused by an excess amount of fats, oils, and grease (FOG) in the sewerage system, which can solidify in underground pipes to form layer upon layer of pipe clogging residue. Foods high in fats, oils, and grease include meats, sauces, gravies, fried dishes, butter, milk, ice cream, and more.

When you wash dishes with detergents and hot water, FOG may appear to be harmless because it disappears down the drain easily. However, as the liquid cools, oil and grease solidify and accumulate. This can cause the flow of wastewater to be restricted, which will eventually result in sewer backups in your home. When FOG creates a clog on the public sewer lines, raw sewage can spill out of the system onto roads, yards, and ultimately into surface waters such as creeks and ponds.

The good news is much of this damage is preventable by making sure FOG does not get into the sewerage system. Some effective ways to prevent the occurrence of FOG in your pipes include disposing of food scraps into the trash, using glass jars to collect excess grease, and wiping grease off dishes with paper towels.

Here are some other helpful hints to keep FOG out of the sewer system:

Do: Wipe pots, pans, and work areas prior to washing.

Don't: Pour cooking residue directly into the drain.

Do: Dispose of food waste into the trash or compost area.

Don't: Dispose of food into the garbage disposal.

Do: Collect waste oil and store for disposal in the trash.

Don't: Pour waste oil directly into the drain.
