JANUARY 2019

Gwinnett's bicentennial draws to a close

Gwinnett County capped its yearlong bicentennial observation on December 15 with a day of family-friendly festivities and a 200th birthday party celebration at the Infinite Energy Center.

In the preceding 12 months, Gwinnettians gathered to salute our past, embrace our present, and welcome our future. They came together in 365 separate bicentennial-themed events: some fun, some educational, and some somber.

High school distance runners carried the Bicentennial Torch on 36 legs totaling 237 miles, visiting 14 city halls, four libraries, and eight parks. An exhibit on Gwinnett's history toured the county. The Gwinnett Historical Society held monthly lectures about the County's history, ranging from our namesake, Button Gwinnett, to Union Civil War soldiers from Gwinnett, to the impact of railroads on the county's development.

The Gwinnett County Communications Division produced more than 170 videos of Gwinnettians, including natives and newcomers, each telling personal stories about their lives in Gwinnett. Those fascinating remembrances and more about Gwinnett history can still be viewed on the nationally recognized website, www.gwinnett200.com.

AROUND GWINNETT

2019 budget emphasizes public safety, maintenance, employees

The proposed budget for 2019 on the Board of Commissioners' agenda January 3 focuses on public safety, retention of employees, and maintenance of equipment and facilities.

The $1.82 billion budget as proposed is about 4.8 percent higher than 2018.

The proposal includes a $1.39 billion operating budget and $438 million for capital improvements, including SPLOST-funded projects. The budget focuses on funding to maintain core county services such as police and fire protection, jail, courts, roads, transit, and water. Additions for new or ongoing initiatives reflect priorities set by the Board of Commissioners last spring.

The fiscal blueprint adds more police officers, sheriff's deputies, and positions for Fire and Emergency Services. It includes expanding transit and improving roads as well as the airport.

New commissioners take office

Gwinnett County officially has two new commissioners effective January 1.

Newly elected District 2 Commissioner Ben Ku and District 4 Commissioner Marlene Fosque took the ceremonial oath of office in late December at the Gwinnett Justice and Administration Center amid friends and well-wishers.

Ku is a software and mobile app developer and Georgia Tech graduate. He also graduated from Gwinnett 101 Citizens Academy. He received the County's Distinguished Service Award for Most Volunteered Hours in 2017. He also serves in the Mentor Jackets program.

After 20 years in the health insurance industry, Fosque retired from Aetna Inc. in 2017. She holds a Bachelor of Science in Business Management from Shorter University and a Master of Public Administration from Regent University. She moved to Gwinnett County in 2003. She previously served as an elections poll manager and completed Community Emergency Response Team training in 2015.

Snellville bridge to be replaced

The Board of Commissioners recently approved a contract to replace the bridge on Springdale Road at No Business Creek near Snellville.

The project will raise the bridge above the 100-year flood level. Curb and gutter, sidewalks, and drainage improvements will also be included.

The bridge replacement will require a road closure at the bridge, which is anticipated to begin in spring 2019. During the closure, access to all driveways will be maintained on either side of the bridge. Signs will direct motorists along the detour route until the road reopens, which is expected in fall 2019.

The $2.77 million project is being paid for by 2009 and 2014 SPLOST funds.

PUBLIC SAFETY

Know the symptoms of CO poisoning

Deaths from carbon monoxide spike every year in winter-time as people try to warm up with faulty or improperly used or maintained generators, stoves, fireplaces, and furnaces.

CO, which is odorless and colorless, is produced when fuel is burned. Symptoms of CO poisoning include headache, fatigue, nausea, dizziness, confusion, vomiting, unconsciousness, and even death.

CO alarms should be installed outside sleeping areas and on each level of the home. They are not substitutes for smoke alarms.

Here are some tips to avoid CO poisoning:

- Use portable generators outdoors away from windows, doors, or vents
- Make sure vents for your furnace, stove, fireplaces, and dryers are not blocked
- Annually inspect your heating system, water heater, and fireplaces
- Only use charcoal grills and camp stoves outdoors
- Don't use a gas oven for heat

PROTECTING OUR RESOURCES

Harvest rainwater, save money, and help the environment

Rainwater may seem like a weird thing to harvest, but it has been done for thousands of years by civilizations around the globe. Rain barrels can harvest rainwater from your home by collecting it from downspouts from your roof and gutters. Harvested rainwater can be used to irrigate plants during dry periods between rain events.

Most barrels hold about 50 gallons of water, and you can connect multiple barrels together to hold even more. Gravity forces the water out of the barrel when you open the spigot, and a water pump can transport water to the farthest parts of your yard.

Connecting your barrels to multiple downspouts may even qualify you for a credit on your Stormwater Utility Fee. Rain barrels can also be decorated to blend in with the house or complement the landscaping, or it could serve as a blank canvas for the kids to paint.

According to the Environmental Protection Agency, rain barrels can:

- Divert water back to the landscape
- Conserve tap water and energy use
- Lower your water bill and utility bills
- Protect rivers and streams from erosion

To learn more about the importance of rain barrels, see how to install and maintain them, and purchase a barrel for your home, attend the Department of Water Resources' free Rain Barrel workshop on Saturday, February 9 at 1:00pm at the Grayson Senior Center at 485 Grayson Parkway in Grayson. Prepayment of $30 is required.
